FARMING BY FAITH

ANDERSON'S PROVIDENCE FARM IS ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS

STORY AND PHOTOS BY EVA MOORE

Donald Snow presses his boot down on the temporary fence so his wife Colleen and two S.C. Department of Agriculture staffers can step over it. In the field ahead are Devon cows — some grazing, some staring at us. One has just given birth, her calf so new she's still licking it to remove the afterbirth.

The Snows practice rotational grazing, moving their cows frequently to new sections of pasture, with a flock of laying hens rotated through behind them to fertilize and aerate the soil. Hence the temporary fencing — and the sought-after grass-fed beef.

Their business has earned a reputation in Upstate restaurant circles, with clients like Husk Greenville and Golden Brown & Delicious carrying Providence Farm beef and pork. (The latter restaurant's owner wrote on Instagram in January of their beef, "I haven't found anything else that touches it for flavor and quality.")

While they used to have to seek out clients, "Now, our last four to five restaurant clients have called us," Donald says — though he adds that they're still looking for a few more. "How do we sell more product? We build relationships. If we show people that we care about what they're doing, they'll buy from us."

Before they started their farm in 2015, Donald didn't have any experience raising livestock. Colleen had been a commercial realtor. The two met at Anderson, South Carolina's NewSpring Church, and together formed a vision of a business that would allow them to nurture people who were working in ministry.

"We threw out tons of ideas: 'What's the craziest idea? How about a farm?'

Whatever we were going to do, it needed to fund ministry," Donald says.

They spent the first several years leasing land to feed their growing herd, shuttling cows between properties. But it wasn't working for them.

"All of our properties were so spread out. It felt so disconnected all the time," Colleen says.

"She used to say, 'The farm is robbing our life,'" Donald says.

"It felt like that — our marriage, our time. No vacation. We were at our wits' end," she says.

That's when Walker Century Farms came into the picture. Drs. William and Nancy Walker — a physician and a retired Clemson plant geneticist, respectively — were raising Devon cattle and owned hundreds of acres of land on a farm dating back to 1897. But the Walkers were aging. According to Colleen's account, William Walker had searched for a farm manager to no avail, and was ready to start selling off cattle.

Instead, the Snows partnered with the Walkers, moving all their cattle onto Walker land in late 2018, with Donald taking charge of both herds. The Snows describe the Walkers as "family" now — a partnership between a longtime family farm and a first-generation one.

The future holds a lot. One of the Snows' expansion plans involves an entity called Providence Farm Provisions, under which they plan to partner with farmers who agree to abide by certain guidelines to be able to sell their meat under the Providence Farm Provisions name.

The Walkers have built an event venue and a market on the farm site. And eventually, the Snows plan to build guesthouses for visiting ministers.

"It's a 10-, 20-year plan, but it gives us a why for what we are doing," Colleen says. "And woven in with all that is stewardship of the land, stewardship of your body, eating seasonally."

"Integrity's really important to us," she says. "This is a long game."

COMMISSIONER'S CORNER

HUGH E. WEATHERS
SOUTH CAROLINA
COMMISSIONER OF

I'VE BEEN EVERYWHERE

Sounds like the old Johnny Cash song that says, "I've been everywhere, man, I've been everywhere". I have that feeling just a little, as last month I traveled to Egypt and to the United Kingdom to develop some new trade relationships that I hope will pay off for South Carolina farmers.

First, I went to Britain, accompanied by my wife Blanche, as part of a US trade delegation sponsored by the British Embassy. As the UK prepares to exit the European Union — the event popularly known as Brexit — the country is working to develop unilateral trade relationships. Their immediate focus includes a free trade agreement with the US. I was one of five state commissioners of agriculture invited to discuss some opportunities.

We toured several impressive farming operations, including a dairy farm with robotic milking and very automated feeding facilities. We visited in London with members of Parliament and their Department of Agriculture. We had a half day at the University of Reading, where the agricultural program is very impressive. We also got a tour of the new US Embassy in London, where we had discussions with staff of the USDA Foreign Ag Service.

Egypt was next, and what a different and fascinating place it was. There are 100 million people in Egypt, many of them facing a nutrition challenge, and the government is working creatively to address their future needs. We had discussions with their Parliament members as well, along with their minister of agriculture and leaders of their agricultural research universities.

Just like here in the US, water is an issue: Most of the country's water comes from the Nile River, and Ethiopia is considering building a dam upriver from Egypt. And just like in our country, market stability is always an issue. I spoke with a poultry operator, a citrus grower, and a rice grower who had some similar concerns to those I hear from South Carolina farmers.

I toured SoyVen, a soybean crushing facility that’s a joint venture between Archer Daniels Midland and Cargill, and met with officials there in Alexandria. The Port of Charleston is probably the closest U.S. port to the SoyVen facility – closer than the Port of New Orleans, through which SoyVen is getting much of its soybean supply — so we discussed opportunities for future supply.

While there, I also had the opportunity to meet with the president of Egypt. He was very well versed in South Carolina trade and agricultural products, and I hope our talk paved the way for some future exchange.

The next step is to follow up. We have begun discussions with Clemson University and the University of South Carolina about potential technological and cultural exchanges. I’m confident that the relationships built on the trip will benefit South Carolina agriculture in the future.

RURAL BROADBAND INVESTMENT WILL HELP SOUTH CAROLINA FARMS

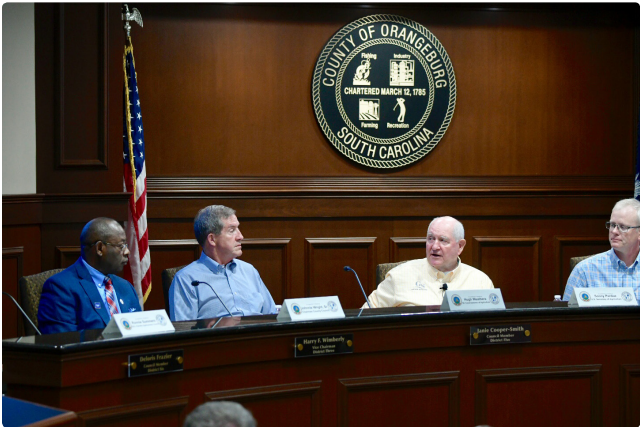

BY U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

On. October 22, U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue announced the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) has invested $9,750,000 in high-speed broadband infrastructure that will create or improve rural e-Connectivity for 3,911 rural households in South Carolina. This is one of many funding announcements in the first round of USDA’s ReConnect Pilot Program investments.

“Our core mission at USDA is to increase rural prosperity through boosting economic opportunity in rural America,” Secretary Perdue said. “We know that rural communities need robust, modern infrastructure to thrive, and that includes having access to broadband e-Connectivity. Under the leadership of President Trump, USDA is proud to partner with rural communities to deploy this critical infrastructure, because we know when rural America thrives, all of America thrives.”

South Carolina Gov. Henry McMaster added, “We are grateful for the leadership President Trump and Secretary Perdue have shown in focusing on increasing broadband connectivity in rural areas. From enhanced health care access to modernizing our educational and workforce resources, these funds will be instrumental in ensuring that Orangeburg County, and all of South Carolina, will remain competitive in the global economy.”

South Carolina Commissioner of Agriculture Hugh Weathers said, “High-speed internet in rural areas helps farmers connect to new markets and promote their businesses – and what’s good for farmers is good for their communities. This initiative will boost Orangeburg County and the rest of the state.”

Orangeburg, County, S.C., will use ReConnect Program grant funding to deploy a fiber to the home (FTTH) broadband network capable of simultaneous transmission rates of 100 megabits per second (Mbps) or greater. The funded service areas include 3,911 households, 21 farms, 17 rural businesses, 13 educational facilities, nine critical community facilities and a health care center. The project will facilitate more access to services and information for local residents, and it will improve the overall quality of life for people in the community.

NEW TRAVELING EXHIBIT SHOWCASES SOUTH CAROLINA'S FOODWAYS

BY THE SOUTH CAROLINA STATE MUSEUM

Developed by the South Carolina State Museum and South Carolina Humanities, a new traveling exhibit celebrates iconic foods from communities around South Carolina.

South Carolina: The Food We Celebrate will be on display at the Penn Center on St. Helena Island throughout November, with future appearances around the state.

The exhibit tells the story of selected foodways and how they are celebrated and shared. The State Museum and South Carolina Humanities collaborated with 22 organizations across South Carolina to develop the content for the exhibit, highlighting 20 different iconic foodways such as barbecue, chicken bog, peaches and more.

From okra, pecans, grits, and apples to oysters, chitlins, boiled peanuts, and more, this exhibit explores the origins of these South Carolina traditions from the cultures that brought them here to how they've changed into the current dishes we celebrate today.

Through 22 vibrant panels, guests will travel from the Pee Dee, to the Upstate, the Low Country and the Midlands to see how each of these traditional southern foods are celebrated with festivals, eating contests, world records and more. Each panel dives deep into the history of each iconic dish or item, describing how its cooked, how it became a southern tradition or where it got its name from.

The exhibit is a part of a traveling exhibition program offered through the South Carolina State Museum. The Traveling Exhibitions Program gives galleries, museums, and art centers across South Carolina the opportunity to request the exhibit to tour their facilities.

2020 EXPO – ROOTED IN TRADITION, THRIVING THROUGH INNOVATION

BY MIRIAM PFLUG, SC AGRIBIZ & FARM EXPO

The management team of the SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo looks forward to its 8th annual farm expo at the Florence Center in Florence, South Carolina, on January 15-16, 2020.

The expo will kick off with a Farmer Appreciation Breakfast at 8:30 a.m. on Wednesday, January 15, followed by an informative general session, educational classes, and trade show beginning at 10 a.m. This year's Expo will focus on handling challenges on the farm as well as methods to address diversity in today's farming operation.

In keeping with our goal of "Thriving Through Innovation", new this year will be the Carolina Hemp Conference. The two-day Carolina Hemp Conference will address all facets of this exciting new industry. Hemp presentation topics will include subjects relative to production, diseases, crop insurance, processing, packaging, marketing, and how this new commodity will be regulated.

The Taste of SC will conclude the Wednesday evening activities. This is an outstanding opportunity to network and visit with ag leaders and agribusiness supporters.

On Thursday, January 16, the South Carolina Commissioner of Agriculture will kick off the day with the annual Commissioner's Breakfast at 8 a.m. Commissioner Weathers will bring ag news from around the state and address changes and the future of agriculture in South Carolina.

Make plans to connect with others in the industry and take advantage of this opportunity to see key farmers and leaders during this two-day Expo.
